He later went to England where he obtained notice in rowing circles and was a member of the Kingston Eight, which rowed at Hendley. He won over 42 awards in rowing. Captain Charles McMenamen Laing was commissioned into the Royal Scots Fusiliers (Territorial Forces) on 22 April 1915, and posted to the ¼ Battalion. He entered the theatre of war of Gallipoli in September 1915. He saw service in the Dardanelles from September 1915 until January 1916. The 1/4th Battalion of the Royal Scots Fusiliers formed part of the 157th Brigade, which formed part of the 52nd Division. The 52nd		55000

	Division formed part of the Mediterranean Expeditionary Force. An extract from British Regiments at Gallipoli; The Royal Scots Fusiliers; "Helles" "Gallipoli, 1915-16" ; ¼ Battalion (T.F.) indicates as follows: December (1915).  To firing line Krithia Nullah (5th). War Diary notes new kind of rocket bomb in use by enemy. Approximately 100 land nightly but most do not explode. Just 1 casualty from this source. War Diary records (19th) (December 1915) party led by Lieutenant C.M. Laing successfully took in wire in front of Cathedral Street then cut Turkish wire in front of trench G12. In action (20th) during 157th Brigade attack on G12 and G11A. Casualties – 2 killed, 18 wounded. Relieved and to rest camp (21st). To firing line east of Krithia Nullah to No. 3 Grenade Post, support line – Krithia Nullah to "C" Avenue (26th). Mines exploded under G11Y and H11A. Consolidating party went forward to assist subsequent attack by 1/5th Royal Scots Fusiliers. Relieved by 1st Essex and to rest camp (31st). Casualties for December – 12 killed, 44 wounded, 47 sick. Although no citation was published when Laing's M.C. was gazette, it is reasonable to assume that that the award was for his bravery on the night of 19th December 1915, when he led a party of men into no mans land to clear wire in front of his unit's trenches, and to cut wire in front of the enemy's trenches in preparation for his Brigade's (i.e. the 157th Brigade's) attack on the Turkish trenches the following day. Laing's A.F.C. recommendation for honours and awards document also indicates that he was awarded the M.C. in December 1915. An extract from British Regiments at Gallipoli; The Royal Scots Fusiliers; "Helles" "Gallipoli, 1915-16"; ¼ Battalion (T.F.) covering the period May 1915 (the date that the Battalion entered the theatre of war of Gallipoli) to January 1916 (the date that the Battalion exited the theatre of war of Gallipoli), refers to only 2 acts of gallantry, these being those of Private DR Lauder who received the V.C. and Laing who received the M.C.. In March 1917 Laing was commissioned into the R.F.C. as a Flying Officer He saw service in Egypt and Palestine from January 1916 until the end of the war. Recommendations of Officers &amp;. He also worked assiduously and displayed conspicuous ability as Officer Commanding the Anti-Submarine Flight at Alexandria". Lieut.Colonel Commanding 64th (Naval) Wing. An extract from CHAPTER IX THE MEDITERRANEAN IN 1918, THE WAR IN THE AIR VOL VI by JONES (page 325) indicates as follows: "The Egypt group was organized as the Sixty-fourth Wing and consisted of the seaplane stations at Alexandria and Port Said, and the kite balloon bases. ....The work of the wing consisted entirely of anti-submarine and minefield patrols, and the escort of convoys to and from Egypt. Escort of convoys was the most important duty because the U-boat commanders did not apparently consider it worthwhile to operate near the Egyptian coast within reach of the British seaplanes, except on those occasions when convoys were on the move." On 6 October 1918, No. 269 Squadron was formed from Nos. 431 and 432 Flights at the seaplane station based at Port Said which had been established there since January 1916, under the command of Major P.L Holmes, RAF. No. 269 was part 64th Wing, and it operated seaplanes from the harbor, plus land-based flight of B.E.2e and Airco DH.9 aircraft. The squadron conducted maritime patrols until the Armistice, and on 15 September 1919, its seaplanes were moved to Alexandria and merged with No. 270 Squadron as its landplane flight had been disbanded in March 1919. The squadron continued as No. 269

	until it was disbanded on 15 November 1919. At some time in the 1940's, Laing returned to New Zealand to farm. The family farm was known as Terawhiti, a 15000 acre station situated on the southern Wellington coast. He later farmed dairy and mixed at Wairiri Lodge at Tinwald (Canterbury), (New Zealand). In his later years He pursued his passion for horse training, breeding and racing. Laing died in June 1966 and was buried in the Ashburton Cemetary. (Ashburton is a large town in the Canterbury Region on the east coast of the South Island of New Zealand). Sold with a quantity of copied service papers and research.

E006	Second type silver medal 25 mm x 21 mm – The Scottish Presbyterian army of some 20 000 men commanded by David Leslie threatened to invade England. They had several scores to settle not least as Cromwell had executed their King Charles I in 1649. General Cromwell was appointed commander in chief after Fairfax resigned. Cromwell crossed the border into Scotland in June but sickness in the ranks forced him to withdraw to the Plain of Dunbar. Leslie expected him to totally withdraw and came out of his defensive position. Cromwell saw his chance and attacked. Cromwell was victorious and Cromwell resolved that – a number of gold and silver be distributed amongst the men.	VF	7000
